

Approxos of musicians, — Link (i.e. following, which came across in a Milanese paper gives a pretty good idea of a composer's difficulties. Signor J., the well-known composer, is met by a friend. "Have you written anything lately," says the artist? "No," answers "We have," says the friend. "No," answers Signor J. "Corpo-dion!" is a serious affair, and Link, that if an idea comes to your head, you have a paper to write it down; if you write down a paper, you can't find a publisher; if you find a publisher, he says to you: if your piece is bad, is not good, nobody buys it; if some one buys it, he can't play it; if he can play it, he does not like the piece!"

Mr. J., one of the best actors in London, and why managers persist in giving him only secondary parts, is going to make out. But not only is he a thoroughly good comedian, he is so a philosopher, and a wit, and somewhat of a Bohemian. A few days ago, in the smoking room of a London club, the conversation, upon hanging up the robes, was of feelings of a criminal on being led to the scaffold. Every one of us had his say as to what would be his probable sentiments at such an awful moment. Mr. J. sat quietly smoking in an arm chair, taking no part in the conversation. When one and another had expressed his feelings on the matter, he was suddenly appeared to as to his own ideas. "Come J," we said, "if you were taken to the scaffold to be hanged, what do you think you would feel like?" Without stirring from the depths of his cosy lounge, Mr. J. took his cigar from his lips, drew a whiff of smoke upwards, and answered calmly: "We boys, — should feel I was playing a losing part."

During last winter and a year or two of Mr. Jack's has been a successful class in literature, which has been well and regularly attended. As will be seen by the list which we publish to-day a departure has been made from the course of study hitherto pursued, and the month of February and March will be devoted to a course of lectures on subjects of a literary character.

Manager Santof, of the Maggie Mitchell company, yesterday telegraphed Mr. Nye that on account of the snow blockade the company would be unable to fill the engagements at the opera house for last night and this morning would have to be changed to Thursday night. This popular little actress will not only receive a cordial welcome when she comes, as there has already been a large sale of seats.

To illustrate the value of a little judicious advertising, Manager Nye yesterday afternoon, after 2 o'clock, circulated 500 coupons announcing the fact that Maggie Mitchell would be compelled to cancel her engagement here for last night on account of the snow blockade. There had already been a large sale of seats, but there was not a single applicant for admission at the opera house last night.

Mr. W. J. Wilson, of Denver, has been down in the Arkansas valley looking after the condition of his stock. He is one of the well-known cattlemen of the country.

Mr. Wilson returned yesterday to Denver, and in describing his trip Mr. Wilson said he had found the condition of stock even worse than he had anticipated. He estimated the number now lying dead at two per cent of the herds on the range, and he said that this is a great deal of representing the loss to be charged to the recent storms, as a great many others have contracted their herds and can not live from now till April, even if they should be continuous good weather. They stand around, and are almost all dead.

Mr. Wilson says that there is even a considerable loss of horses, although they get through the winter better than cattle. As the riders went out to bring his horses in of the range, and in doing so handled them as gently as it was possible to do, driving them at a slow walk, yet in spite of this two horses died while on the way in. These animals were in elegant condition at the beginning of the winter.

Mr. C. S. W. is the architect, is working on plans for a new house for Mr. A. J. Davis. It will be a model house.

The Powder River Live Stock company filed its annual statement at the city clerk's office yesterday. The statement shows the company to be in a very prosperous condition.

Dr. Hewitt was unfortunate in losing his valuable mare "Lucky Vic" on Saturday night by an accident. She stepped upon a rake the handle of which flew up and penetrated her nostrils.
